

RAPID TRANSIT, PHILA., RECEIVES LARGEST REFUND

Quaker City Company Has Biggest Amount, in Eastern Penna.

491 HAVE RETURNS

Federal Tax Repayments Amount to Sum of $69,476.930

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—The Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company received the largest repayment in 1931 from the Federal Government, among 491 firms and individuals in the Eastern Pennsylvania Internal Revenue District, it was revealed today, with tax funds aggregating $590,452. The list includes payments of $500 or more.

Secretary of the Treasury Mellon reported to Congress today the refunds totaling $69,476,930 throughout the country includes all taxes illegally collected and returned for the 1931 fiscal year ending June 26. He did not list credits and abatements.

Abatements are deducted from taxes assessed, but not yet paid. Refunds are actual cash payments. The year before refunds totaled $126,836,333, abatements $176,298,377 and credits $36,535,245.

The tax refunds made by the United States Government arise through failure of individuals and business firms to avail themselves of deductions allowed by law. Government analysis of tax returns revealed the fact that the individuals in many cases had paid excess taxes. In other cases claims for refunds were filed with the Internal Revenue Bureau.

A number of persons, officials of the Internal Revenue office said, listed, as taxable property, gifts, stock dividends and proceeds of insurance or which they were beneficiaries. Others failed to record losses in the stock market and interest on mortgages and loans, all of which are non-taxable.

While cash dividends on stock are taxable, stock dividends are not, although they reduce the levy on the owner's total number of shares. One reduction not taken advantage of relates to physical properties on land which have an estimated life of 50 years and are allowed depreciation of two per cent a year.

Many large business firms insure the lives of their presidents or controlling officers for large sums, it was pointed out, but the proceeds of this insurance is free from tax, according to a law passed in 1928.

Sums paid as municipal taxes on homes should be deducted from the Federal income tax return, but sometimes home owners fail to take advantage of this provision. Gifts of securities or property, such as are often made by parents to children, also are tax free.

Some firms failed to include expenses for business operations, said Internal Revenue officials, citing as an example the ten per cent depreciation reduction allowed on office furniture, which is assessed as having a life of ten years.

EDUCATORS MEETING IN PITTSBURGH THREE DAYS

Possibility of Uniontown Schools Being Closed; Financial Shortage

OTHER STATE ITEMS

PITTSBURGH.—Educators from all sections of the State will be in Pittsburgh December 28 to 30 for the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania State Education Association.

First sessions will be held Dec. 28 in Schenley High School with other sessions scheduled for Carnegie Institute, Frick Training School and the Western Pennsylvania School for the Blind.

UNIONTOWN.—Possibility of schools here being closed after January 1 is being seriously discussed by officials, following a survey of Municipal finances.

Funds on hand, members of the Board of Education said, will not permit operation through next month. Two schemes to avert the closing have been proposed, one is a voluntary salary cut for teachers, the other an appeal to delinquent taxpayers to settle up last year's assessments.

WAYNESBURG.—Judge A. H. Sayers doesn't approve of matrimony when the husband is apparently dependent upon illegal methods of supporting himself or a wife.

Samuel Rogers, of near Jefferson, appeared before Judge Sayers, pleaded guilty to stealing chickens. Rogers also informed the court he had been married since committing the theft.

Aroused, Judge Sayers told the defendant that a matrimonial venture during present hard times by one who "apparently had committed a larceny as a means of making a living," verged on the criminal itself. He sentenced Rogers to serve 2 to 4 months in jail and pay a fine of $50.

LIEUTENANT ADAMS IS TO SPEAK AT NEWTOWN

Deep-Sea Diver Will Tell of Experiences With Commander Byrd

WILL SHOW "MOVIES"

NEWTOWN, Dec. 28.—The story of his great adventure with Admiral Byrd will be told by Lieutenant Adams to residents of this section in Newtown Hall, Tuesday evening next. This program of unusual merit is made possible through efforts of the Newtown Exchange Club.

The fact that Lieutenant Adams is an Exchangeite, is believed responsible for his ready acceptance of the invitation of the local club to speak here.

It is believed that in the stories of daring there is none more thrilling than that of Admiral Byrd and his men. Lieutenant Adams was an officer on the expedition to the South Pole. Forty-three men took part.

The official moving picture of the expedition, "With Byrd at the South Pole," will also be shown at that time.

Perhaps few men of this generation have had so colorful a career, and are more qualified to speak with a first hand knowledge of those things which interest all. Lieutenant Adams was in the American Navy—a deep sea diver—Spanish and World War veteran—Member of the Byrd Antarctic Expedition—as an officer on board the now famous ship "City of New York" at Little America and the Bay of Whales, and, a close observer of things and events throughout his travels over every important sea and land territory of the world is indeed more than qualified to command and hold the attention of his hearers. He presents a vivid graphic, and absorbingly interesting lecture which cannot soon be forgotten.

The pictured story of the daring feat at the bottom of the world records the greatest romantic adventure of modern times.

The pictures will show, and Lieutenant Adams will tell of the manner in which they were forced to fight for their lives, their hardships and dangers, the queer animals, including the funny penguins and huge whales; the flight over the South Pole itself, will interest all.

The hall accommodates 400 people, and when all available seats are taken the doors will be closed.

Condition of Hiker, Hit By Auto, is Serious

Apparently the victim of a hit-and-run driver, Ira D. Brown, 35 years old, of the Seamen's Institute, Philadelphia, was found unconscious in a ditch along the Lincoln Highway, near Oxford Valley, last evening.

He was rushed to St. Francis Hospital, Trenton, where he was found to be suffering from a possible fracture of the skull, fractures of several ribs, bruise burns of the back and internal injuries. His condition is reported to be critical.

The Langhorne state highway patrol is trying to learn why Brown was walking along the road. When found by Patrolman Diem he was carrying a large sum of money in his pockets. The identity of the victim was established by discharge papers from the U. S. Army and Merchant Marine.

A passing autoist notified a garage along the highway that a man was lying in the ditch and a telephone call brought the highway patrol to the scene.

Much in Little

The harmless-looking little package carried under the arm of George Boyd, special officer of the Senate, is the famous moratorium that caused such a turmoil in Congress before its final ratification. Boyd is shown as he delivered the document at the White House for President Hoover's signature. It looks insignificant, doesn't it? But it means the world to Europe.

FALLS HORSE COMPANY HOLDS ANNUAL DINNER

Organization Believed to Be One Hundred Years Old

ITS EARLY HISTORY

FALLSINGTON, Dec. 28.—The Falls Township Company of Safety met for their annual business meeting in the Community Hall on Saturday afternoon. After the meeting they adjourned for the dinner.

The Company of Safety was formerly called The Falls Township Horse Company and is supposed to be 100 years old, but no records have been found to tell the exact time of its beginning. It first met in the store-room where M. W. Moon's store is located, and consisted of a few members, but gradually became popular and had many members. The annual dues were 50c a year. After the library and hall were built, meetings were held there, and members began having the suppers, which were prepared by the families of some of the directors, and the dues were increased to $2.

Some of the older inhabitants relate stories of their searches for stolen horses, that are quite interesting. At one time the horse and buggy of Dr. J. N. Richards was stolen and the company at once sent out searchers. After a long search they came upon the track of the missing horse and followed it to Sergeantville, stopped at a hotel for inquiries. The hotel keeper sent a man with a lantern with them to the house of the farmer about 11 o'clock at night. Some of the men went to the stable and found the horse. They then called up the man, who when he found what they wanted, came to the door with a shot-gun. They questioned the farmer, and he said he had purchased the horse lately, which was confirmed by the hotel keeper's assistant. The horse was delivered to the men, and the buggy found at another place.

Another time a team of horses was stolen from Mrs. John White, of Penn Valley, and was traced and recovered, and also a horse of Anthony R. Sickles, which was found in an ice house in Morrisville.

The present officers of the company are: President, Morris Kirby; secretary, Herman Heavener; treasurer, Clinton Neagley.

Work Under Way; Expected to Be Completed in Few Days

ARE NOW PLACING PIPES

Final Grading Being Done Beneath Underpass; Soon Complete

Work of eliminating the "camel" type of bridge across the canal at Green Lane is now under way and will be completed within a few days, it is believed. The improvement is being done in connection with the elimination of the grade crossing of the P. R. R.

Concrete pipes 24 inches in diameter are being placed to carry the water which must remain in the canal for a period of five years for industrial purposes.

As soon as the concrete pipes have been laid the work of filling in the canal the full width of the roadway will be started and then traffic will be opened beneath the new underpass at Green Lane.

Final grading is now being done beneath the Green Lane underpass and this will be completed shortly.

Visit Paid at Kindergarten Party By Santa Claus

During last week, each child brought many articles of food, and with the help of Miss Wright and her mother, they were able to fill five baskets, which were given to families in need. The children were allowed to help pack the baskets and derived great pleasure doing so. When the filling of the baskets was at its height, the sound of a sleigh bells was heard. There was a wild rush for the living room and who should be struggling to get out of the fire place but Santa himself. Santa then busied himself in distributing his gifts to the children. The children also enjoyed singing Christmas songs.

While Santa was resting, the children entered another room to look for a gift which Santa must leave for their teacher, Miss Wright. Another sound of sleigh bells and a wild rush back to the living room, and Santa was gone. Ice cream was served.

DRUG VICTIMS

Analysis of the data collected in the narcotic drugs survey conducted for the Wickesham commission is not complete, but certain facts are self-evident without going deeply into cases.

For one thing the survey gives the physicians a clean bill of health as to responsibility for making drug addicts through the reckless promiscuous prescribing of narcotics. Members of the medical profession create very few addicts. Nor are they a principal source of supply to those afflicted with the dope habit. Most of the vicious stuff is obtained through criminal channels.

One of the most important discoveries is that bad association caused 95 per cent of the cases of addiction in the area studied. That means the problem is sociological rather than penal.

The survey definitely fixes the responsibility and shows that arm of the government whose duty it is to wipe out the drug traffic where its job lies. Its job is not an easy one, although to the laity it may seem a relatively easy thing to cut off the major sources of supply.

Unlike the bootleg liquor buyer, the victim of dope never "squales." The future supply of the stuff he values above all else depends upon his silence. Stool-pigeons are used by the narcotic squad but they usually trap only the small fry. Nor have the most severe penal punishments succeeded in breaking the hold of the habit upon its victims.

AIR MAIL PROGRESS

Reduction by the postoffice department of the air mail appropriation is seen by close observers as the beginning of the end for the air mail subsidy. It will not take many more of these 10 per cent cuts to bring the cost to the government down to the actual value of the services rendered by air mail contractors.

The government is now paying from 43 cents to $1.25 per pound per mile with premiums for night flying, special hazards such as mountains and ship-to-ground radio connections. Postmaster General Brown tells the contractors that a responsible company has offered to transport mail for 30 cents a mile during daylight hours.

Is it possible that this fledgling of only 11 years ago is now nearly strong enough to fly with its own wings? Only a few years ago the postoffice department took the weakling under its wing to nurture and protect it.

When Congress subsidized the air mail it had three motives. It recognized a growing demand for a faster mail service than the railroads could provide, desired to promote the development of commercial aviation on a transcontinental scale and realized that any seed planted in the field of commercial aviation would be harvested in time of war. National defense benefits from development and extension of aviation through commercial flying.

Competition between air mail lines for government mail contracts may be expected within a few years unless consolidation of those lines is completed within that period.

People can hardly wait for the new car models to come out, so they can decide which car they would buy if they were buying one.

COMMUNICATION

Editor, Courier:

I quote the following from the National W. C. T. U.:

"There is only one answer to the wet claim that beer would restore agriculture prosperity; and that answer is the statement of Gustav Pabst, Milwaukee brewer, president of the United States Brewers' Association. President Pabst said that the actual amount of grain used by brewers, including barley, was less than three fourths of one per cent of the total grain crop. 'This was the brewers' attitude in May, 1917, when they objected to giving up brewing for the sake of the war needs of the Nation. The Evening Star, Washington, D. C., on May 7, 1917, and other papers printed the following:

"Headed by Gustav Pabst, a delegation representing the brewers of the United States, was heard today by the Senate agriculture committee on Senator Gronna's bill to forbid the manufacture of grain into alcoholic liquors during the war.

"The actual amount of grain used in brewing, principally barley, they told the committee, represents less than three-quarters of 1 per cent of all the grain produced in the United States, and in addition to that, the barley used, they said, is not a staple human food, here or abroad.

"The amount of land required to raise all the grain used in brewing in the United States, the committee was told, is less than seven one-hundredths of the total of all the agricultural land in the country. From these figures the brewers argued that the brewing industry was too small a factor to be considered in the food conservation program.

"If the brewing industry was too small a factor to be considered in 1917 it is too small a factor to be considered in 1931, as a prosperity maker.

"Brewers now seeking to revive their outlawed industry have not fooled American farmers. The National Grange, composed of a million farmers in 34 states, voted unanimously on November 20th at its annual convention in Madison, Wisconsin, to oppose a change in the 18th Amendment or the Volstead Law. Farmers who sell more milk and other products since prohibition are puncturing the bubbles blown by the Pabsts, Busches and their satellites.

"Extravagant claims of taxation possibilities in beer made by wet millionaires seeking to shift taxes from themselves to beer-drinkers, also are being revised downward as facts come to light. Senator Wagner, of New York, in a radio address on November 20, conceded that talk of $1,000,000,000 (one billion) or more was ballyhoo. He reduced the claim to $250,000,000 in revenue if beer could be restored.

This would be paid by the American workman as wet millionaires drink champagne and hard liquor.

"When deflated to actual facts, wet propaganda is mainly fabrications, false economies and worse morals."

Yours truly,

MARTHA A. LOWNES.

SYNOPSIS

Young and beautiful Fanchon Meredith leaves San Francisco by airplane to escape arrest in connection with a murder in which her sweetheart, Tony, is implicated. She had not known that he was a gunman. Evelyn Howard, whom Fanchon had met on a voyage from Hawaii, is aboard. She is enroute to New York to live with her wealthy aunt, Mrs. Allison Carstairs, whom she has never seen. The plane crashes and all but Fanchon are killed. Grasping the opportunity to start life anew, Fanchon goes to the Carstairs home as Evelyn. Mrs. Carstairs' affection wins her heart. At Southampton, awaiting the arrival of her son, Collin, Mrs. Carstairs warns Fanchon not to take him seriously. He arrives and accuses Fanchon of being there under false pretenses. Collin objects to "Evelyn." Fanchon learns that Evelyn had indiscreet affairs with a naval officer and a native.

CHAPTER XV

Fanchon remembered certain words of Jennie Carstairs, words actually urging her to begin all over, making a clean sweep of the years which lay behind. Now she knew what they had meant. Then, she had not known.

"I am perfectly willing," she argued. "Circumstantial evidence is a hard thing to fight against. Youth—and what we have called folly—and rumors and appearances of evil do not make it any easier." She looked him straight in the eyes. "I have done nothing of which I am ashamed," she said, honestly, in the person of Evelyn Howard and in the person of Fanchon Meredith as well. For Fanchon, too, was young and Fanchon had loaned herself to folly and Fanchon had met with the consequences of evil appearances and circumstantial evidence. . . .

"I believe you," he said, slowly, "whether it is because you are so darned beautiful or not, I don't know; I do know that you are not at all like your letters. Your letters seemed—insincere. You do not, Yes, I believe you. Shall we call it—armistice?"

"Armed truce?" she laughed and laid her slender, golden hand in his. Jennie Carstairs, coming softly through the garden, saw them standing there and her face lighted. She came forward with a soft exclamation of pleasure.

"Collin, my darling! and Evelyn! You've met then. I'm so glad!" "So am I—" said Collin. His arm went about his mother, he bent his tall, dark head to kiss her cheek. But his hand still held Fanchon last.

Fanchon had an inspiration. She said, not trying to free herself: "Aunt Jennie . . . I told Collin just now I wouldn't speak of—something to you. But I'd rather, I have talked to him about it; I have explained my reasons for not speaking, or at least . . ."

" . . . she looked at him briefly, "he has explained them for me. I—I'd like you to know that all I have told him he believes. That there isn't anything I should tell you, not really. Nothing that matters. Nothing that would hurt you."

"My dear," said Jennie Carstairs, "together, hands fast, the three went back toward the house."

That was the beginning of Fanchon's happy summer. Collin, canceling whatever other plans he may have had, was at "Dunroese" all season save for those occasions on which he went to town on business. He taught Fanchon to ride and to golf. She was already able to swim and her prowess in the surf amazed him.

But the bit of ocean which surrounded Southampton was child's play to Fanchon after her years on Hawaiian beaches, riding the great breakers to shore. He improved her tennis game and took her to dinners and dances. They were always together, to the entertainment of the colony and to the discomfort of a great many marriageable maidens whose eyes and hearts were set upon the conquest of Collin.

Nor did Fanchon lack for attendance. She had more young men about her doorstep than she knew what to do with. She had everything in her favor. She was young, she was beautiful, she was intelligent, she was a good sport and she was backed by the Carstairs millions and the unassailable Carstairs social position.

"The first thing you know," said Collin to Fanchon one day on the links, "first thing you know you'll be getting married and then where will we be?"

"Just where you were before," she laughed, "and well rid of me . . . according to your own early confession."

"I'd rather hoped you'd forgotten that," he grumbled and promptly muffled his easy approach to the green.

"Well, so I have! No, I won't get married, ever," said Fanchon, and her eyes were very dark and sombre. "Neither will I, then," he said, cheerfully, "I couldn't bear to bring a fourth into our happy threesome. We'll just go down into a ripe old age together," he laughed.

But his eyes were shadowed, too. He had been aware, for some time, that he was becoming far too fond of his cousin. And he looked with horror, as do most people, upon marriage of persons of the same blood of relatives. That his mother was a little troubled, he knew also. He had seen it in her eyes, heard it in a phrase or two which she had uttered in his hearing. But she trusted him and Evelyn. She loved them both. He thought, suddenly feeling old and worn, how strange that we should have disliked one another so much, on first sight! Was that not in itself a warning of—love to come? Hate, they say, is very near love. "After," he remarked aloud, "after you make your debut and I see you safely through it and shoo all the unwholesome folk the doorstep, I'm thinking of going round the world again. You'll be with mother, so I won't have my usual compunction about leaving her."

He looked at Fanchon. He couldn't help it. She paled, under the tan, under the healthy, lovely glow. He saw her eyes fall, her lips tighten. She turned to her waiting maid and selected a club from her bag with the utmost unconcern.

"We'll miss you," she said, lightly. "Aunt Jennie spoke of taking me aboard in the spring for a long visit. France and England and perhaps elsewhere. Maybe we could meet you somewhere and come on home together."

"Thanks," he said, gloomily. "Why, Collin, for what?" she asked, in some amazement.

"For missing me—" He couldn't help it. If his life depended on silence he would have been forced to sacrifice his life. Fond of her! He knew now, as she walked beside him, troubled, not answering his challenge, that he loved her. He loved her terribly.

"Of course, we'll miss you," she said, still trying to keep her words light and casual, "more than we can say."

There was no further speech between them of a personal nature, that day. They both played very bad golf.

Going home Fanchon went directly to her room and lay down on her bed while Emma got out her clothes for the dance she was going to with Collin that night. She lay very still and straight, having taken off her clothes and put on a thin silken kimono. It was very warm, the heat of early September. They would soon return to town. Collin would soon be leaving them. This was the first she had heard of it.

DRUG VICTIMS

Analysis of the data collected in the narcotic drugs survey conducted for the Wickersham commission is not complete, but certain facts are self-evident without going deeply into cases.

For one thing the survey gives the physicians a clean bill of health as to responsibility for making drug addicts through the reckless promiscuous prescribing of narcotics. Members of the medical profession create very few addicts. Nor are they a principal source of supply to those afflicted with the dope habit. Most of the vicious stuff is obtained through criminal channels.

One of the most important discoveries is that bad association caused 95 per cent of the cases of addiction in the area studied. That means the problem is sociological rather than penal.

The survey definitely fixes the responsibility and shows that arm of the government whose duty it is to wipe out the drug traffic where its job lies. Its job is not an easy one, although to the laity it may seem a relatively easy thing to cut off the major sources of supply.

Unlike the hoodleg liquor buyer, the victim of dope never "squeals." The future supply of the stuff he values above all else depends upon his silence. Stool-pigeons are used by the narcotic squad but they usually trap only the small fry. Nor have the most severe penal punishments succeeded in breaking the hold of the habit upon its victims.

AIR MAIL PROGRESS

Reduction by the postoffice department of the air mail appropriation is seen by close observers as the beginning of the end for the air mail subsidy. It will not take many more of these 10 per cent cuts to bring the cost to the government down to the actual value of the services rendered by air mail contractors.

The government is now paying from 43 cents to $1.25 per pound per mile with premiums for night flying, special hazards such as mountains and ship-to-ground radio connections. Postmaster General Brown tells the contractors that a responsible company has offered to transport mail for 30 cents a mile during daylight hours.

Is it possible that this fledgling of only 11 years ago is now nearly strong enough to fly with its own wings? Only a few years ago the postoffice department took the weakling under its wing to nurture and protect it.

When Congress subsidized the air mail it had three motives. It recognized a growing demand for a faster mail service than the railroads could provide, desired to promote the development of commercial aviation on a transcontinental scale and realized that any seed planted in the field of commercial aviation would be harvested in time of war. National defense benefits from development and extension of aviation through commercial flying.

Competition between air mail lines for government mail contracts may be expected within a few years unless consolidation of those lines is completed within that period.

People can hardly wait for the new car models to come out, so they can decide which car they would buy if they were buying one.

COMMUNICATION

Editor, Courier:
I quote the following from the National W. C. T. U.:

"There is only one answer to the wet claim that beer would restore agriculture prosperity; and that answer is the statement of Gustav Pabst, Milwaukee brewer, president of the United States Brewers' Association. President Pabst said that the actual amount of grain used by brewers, including barley, was less than three fourths of one per cent of the total grain crop. "This was the brewers' attitude in May, 1917, when they objected to giving up brewing for the sake of the war needs of the Nation. The Evening Star, Washington, D. C., on May 7, 1917, and other papers printed the following:

"Headed by Gustav Pabst, a delegation representing the brewers of the United States, was heard today by the Senate agriculture committee on Senator Gronna's bill to forbid the manufacture of grain into alcoholic liquors during the war.

"The actual amount of grain used in brewing, principally barley, they told the committee, represents less than three-quarters of 1 per cent of all the grain produced in the United States, and in addition to that, the barley used, they said, is not a staple human food, here or abroad.

"The amount of land required to raise all the grain used in brewing in the United States, the committee was told, is less than seven one-hundredths of the total of all the agricultural land in the country. From these figures the brewers argued that the brewing industry was too small a factor to be considered in the food conservation program.

"If the brewing industry was too small a factor to be considered in 1917 it is too small a factor to be considered in 1931, as a prosperity maker.

"Brewers now seeking to revive their outlawed industry have not fooled American farmers. The National Grange, composed of a million farmers in 34 states, voted unanimously on November 20th at its annual convention in Madison, Wisconsin, to oppose a change in the 18th Amendment

Young and beautiful Fanchon Meredith leaves San Francisco by airplane to escape arrest in connection with a murder in which her sweetheart, Tony, is implicated. She had not known that he was a gunman. Evelyn Howard, whom Fanchon had met on a voyage from Hawaii, is aboard. She is enroute to New York to live with her wealthy aunt, Mrs. Allison Carstairs, whom she has never seen. The plane crashes and all but Fanchon are killed. Grasping the opportunity to start life anew, Fanchon goes to the Carstairs home as Evelyn. Mrs. Carstairs' affection wins her heart. At Southampton, awaiting the arrival of her son, Collin, Mrs. Carstairs warns Fanchon not to take him seriously. He arrives and accuses Fanchon of being there under false pretenses. Collin objects to "Evelyn." Fanchon learns that Evelyn had indiscreet affairs with a naval officer and a native.

CHAPTER XV

Fanchon remembered certain words of Jennie Carstairs, words actually urging her to begin all over, making a clean sweep of the years which lay behind. Now she knew what they had meant. Then, she had not known.

"I am perfectly willing," she argued. "Circumstantial evidence is a hard thing to fight against. Youth—and what we have called folly—and rumors and appearances of evil do not make it any easier." She looked him straight in the eyes. . . . "I have done nothing of which I am ashamed," she said, honestly, in the person of Evelyn Howard and in the person of Fanchon Meredith as well. For Fanchon, too, was young and Fanchon had loaned herself to folly and Fanchon had met with the consequences of evil appearances and circumstantial evidence. . . .

"I believe you," he said, slowly, "whether it is because you are so darned beautiful or not, I don't know. I do know that you are not at all like your letters. Your letters seemed—insincere. You do not. Yes, I believe you. Shall we call it—armistice?"

"Armed truce?" she laughed and laid her slender, golden hand in his. Jennie Carstairs, coming softly through the garden, saw them standing there and her face lighted. She came forward with a soft exclamation of pleasure.

"Collin, my darling! and Evelyn! You've met then. I'm so glad!"

"So am I—" said Collin. His arm went about his mother, he bent his tall, dark head to kiss her cheek. But his hand still held Fanchon fast. Fanchon had an inspiration. She said, not trying to free herself: "Aunt Jennie . . . I told Collin just now I wouldn't speak of—something to you. But I'd rather. I have talked to him about it; I have explained my reasons for not speaking, or at least . . . " she looked at him briefly. "I have explained them for me. I'd like you to know that all I have told him he believes. That there isn't anything I should tell you, not really. Nothing that matters. Nothing that would hurt you."

"My dear," said Jennie Carstairs. "Together, hands fast, the three went back toward the house."

That was the beginning of Fanchon's happy summer. Collin, canceling whatever other plans he may have had, was at "Dunmore" all season save for those occasions on which he went to town on business. He taught Fanchon to ride and to golf. She was already able to swim and her prowess in the surf amazed him.

But the bit of ocean which surrounded Southampton was child's play to Fanchon after her years on Hawaiian beaches, riding the great breakers to shore. He improved her tennis game and took her to dinners and dances. They were always together, to the entertainment of the colony and to the discomfort of a great many marriageable maidens whose eyes and hearts were set upon the conquest of Collin.

Nor did Fanchon lack for attendance. She had more young men about her doorstep than she knew what to do with. She had everything in her favor. She was young, she was beautiful, she was intelligent, she was a good sport and she was backed by the Carstairs millions and the unassailable Carstairs social position.

"The first thing you know," said Collin to Fanchon one day on the links, "first thing you know you'll be getting married and then where will we be?"

"Just where you were before," she laughed, "and well rid of me . . . according to your own early confession."

"I'd rather hoped you'd forgotten that," he grumbled and promptly muffled his easy approach to the green.

"Well, so I have! No, I won't get married, ever," said Fanchon, and her eyes were very dark and sombre. "Neither will I, then," he said, cheerfully. "I couldn't bear to bring a fourth into our happy threesome. We'll just go down into a fine old age together," he laughed.

But his eyes were shadowed, old. He had been aware, for some time, that he was becoming far too fond of his cousin. And he looked with horror, as do most people, upon marriage of persons of the same blood, of relatives. That his mother was a little troubled, he knew also. He had seen it in her eyes, heard it in a phrase or two which she had uttered in his hearing. But she trusted him and Evelyn. She loved them both. He thought, suddenly feeling old and worn, how strange that we should have disliked one another so much, on first sight! Was that not in itself a warning of—love to come? Hate, they say, is very near love. "Aliter," he remarked aloud, "after you make your debt and I see you safely through it and shoo all the uneligibles off the doorstep. I'm thinking of going round the world again. You'll be with mother, so I won't have my usual compunction about leaving her."

He looked at Fanchon. He couldn't help it. She paled, under the tan, under the healthy, lovely glow. He saw her eyes fall, her lips tighten. She turned to her waiting caddy and selected a club from her bag with the utmost unconcern.

"We'll miss you," she said, lightly. "Aunt Jennie spoke of taking me aboard in the spring for a long visit. France and England and perhaps elsewhere. Maybe we could meet you somewhere and come on home together."

"Thanks," he said, gloomily. "Why, Collin, for what?" she asked, in some amazement.

"For missing me—"

He couldn't help it. If his life depended on silence he would have been forced to sacrifice his life. Fond of her! He knew now, as she walked beside him, troubled, not answering his challenge, that he loved her. He loved her terribly.

"Of course, we'll miss you," she said, still trying to keep her words light and casual, "more than we can say."

There was no further speech between them of a personal nature, that day. They both played very bad golf.

Going home Fanchon went directly to her room and lay down on her bed while Emma got out her clothes for the dance she was going to with Collin that night. She lay very still and straight, having taken off her kimono. It was very warm, the heat of early September. They would soon return to town. Collin would soon be leaving them. This was the first she had heard of it.

CONKLIN REVIEWS YEAR'S COMEDIES IN SPORTS

By LES CONKLIN
(L. N. S. Sports Writer)

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—The year 1931 in boxing was a banner one for champions.

Four title-holders—Max Schmeling, Bat Battalino, Tony Canzoneri and Maxie Rosenbloom—who in January were alleged to be tottering on their thrones, gave the laugh to their critics by holding on to their diadems throughout the year. And three of them—Schmeling, Battalino and Canzoneri, firmly established their right to be classed as real champions.

Rosenbloom, best of a dilapidated crop of light-heavyweights, still is regarded as a clown with a cream-puff punch. But the fact remains that Maxie was able to defend his title against the best opposition available.

Schmeling regained his earlier popularity by scoring a technical knockout over W. L. (Young) Stribling the pride of the South, in the fifteenth round of their bout at Cleveland, on July 3. Many fight experts were so impressed by the German's showing that they predicted he will hold the heavyweight title for five more years.

The lion-hearted Battalino, a stumble-up in a gymnasium but a mighty warrior when his crown was at stake, handily disposed of the four leading challengers in the featherweight division—Kid Chocolate, Fidel La Barba, Kid Francis and Earl Mastro.

Canzoneri handily disposed of all comers in the lightweight division. Tony's chief feats were his knockout of Jack (Kid) Berg in Chicago, his later victory over the Briton in New York on points, and his sensational 15-round victory over Kid Chocolate in New York on November 29, one of the best fights seen in Gotham in years.

The only major change in boxing's list of royalty was the victory of Lou Brouillard, 20-year-old youth from Danielson, Conn., over Jack Thompson, welterweight champion, in Boston, on October 23. Brouillard beat Thompson once when the latter's title was not at stake and then repeated his triumph in a match for the championship. The new "baby champion" has been fighting for only three years.

Kid Chocolate, the flashy Cuban, captured the synthetic junior lightweight championship from the veteran Benny Bass, and Canzoneri annexed the equally synthetic junior welter crown by knocking out Berg.

Young Perez, a youthful and virtually unknown Frenchman, put in a strong claim for the fly-weight title by knocking out the veteran Frankie Genaro, N. B. A. champion, in Paris, on Oct. 26. Midget Wolgast, of Philadelphia, is recognized as flyweight champion in New York and Pennsylvania. Wolgast and Genaro engaged in a listless 15-round draw in New York early in the year.

Al Brown retained his bantamweight championship. The middleweight situation remained in a muddle despite the staging of various elimination tournaments designed to stage a worthy successor to Mickey Walker.

The year definitely marked the passing of the million-dollar gate in boxing. The depression hit the cauliflower industry almost everywhere.

In New York, however, two promoters operated successfully. Jimmy Johnston, featuring heavyweights almost exclusively, conducted outdoor boxing shows at the Brooklyn ball park with such success that his rival, Madison Square Garden corporation, was forced to take him in as general manager in self-defense. Johnston continued his success with the Garden.

The Queensboro Stadium in Long Island City showed a profit of $29,200, its biggest annual revenue in more than ten years.

Several promising young heavyweights, including Ernie Schaaf, Charley Retzlaff, Steve Hamas and Stanley Poreda, developed rapidly during the year.

Primo Carnera and Vittorio Campolo were punctured as foreign "menaces" in the heavyweight division.

Carnera being soundly trounced by Jack Sharkey and Campolo suffering a knockout at the hands of Schaaf. Carnera, however, surprised the experts by taking the play away from Sharkey during the first seven rounds of the 15-round battle.

The outstanding development among the heavies, outside of Schmeling's knockout victory over Stribling, was the rise of Mickey Walker to prominence. The former middleweight champion waded through several trial horses and held Sharkey to a draw in fifteen rounds, many experts claiming Mickey should have been awarded the decision.

Sharkey partially redeemed himself by his win over Carnera. The Boston tar and Tommy Loughran are still the "hard luck boys" of the division. Schmeling won't fight either of them. Loughran boxed over most of the leading heavies during the year, winning something like thirteen bouts in a row, but his knockout by Sharkey still is a black mark on his record.

The Bristol Trust Company invites its friends and patrons together with the general public to consider the desirability of again associating themselves with its 1932 Christmas Club and in doing so would call attention to the service they have rendered the community through the 20 years of its Christmas Club's existence. During all these years the club has been the largest in Bucks County. It has just completed paying out $80,000 to the members of the 1931 Club, and anticipates a larger club for 1932.

The New Year is upon us, with its problems and its pleasurable anticipations. At the completion of its 52 weeks of endeavors nothing will round out the year more happily, nor bring greater joy than membership in the 1932 Christmas Club.

The Club is now open and we urge you to take advantage of the opportunity by joining at once.
